SCUD FLY

A scud is a freshwater crustacean that is an important food source for many fish species. Many anglers refer to them as fresh water shrimp. The "scud fly" is a popular pattern used by anglers to imitate these organisms. They tend to hatch in the spring, and that is the prime time to fish them.

A scud fly typically consists of a curved hook, a body made of dubbing material, and a shellback made of thin, flexible material such as latex or thin skin.
